Tokyo Metropolitan Art Museum's Mission

The Museum aspires to be a "doorway to art," open to all people for compelling art experiences—a place where children can visit, budding artists can debut their works, and people with disabilities can come to enjoy art without hesitation. The Museum will strive to build an "art community: a place for creativity and coaction" where people can encounter new values, re-examine themselves, and deepen their bonds with the world. In this context, then, it will provide encounters with art as "nourishment for living." The Museum will seek through its activities to be "a haven for enrichment of the heart."

History of the Tokyo Metropolitan Art Museum

SATO Keitaro (1868-1940)

An industrialist born in Kitakyushu City and once considered the "King of Coal." Inspired by the philanthropy of American steel magnate Andrew Carnegie, SATO used his own funds to found the Tokyo Prefectural Art Museum, subsidize scholarships and hospitals, and promote research for education and the betterment of living.

1926 ▶ Founding — Tokyo Prefectural Art Museum*

The Museum opened on May 1, 1926 as Japan's first public art museum on the basis of a one million yen donation (about 4 billion yen in today's currency) by industrialist SATO Keitaro. Besides exhibitions showcasing works by art groups, it hosted touring exhibitions of significant artists and exhibitions of art masterpieces from Japan and abroad. In this way, it functioned as a "temple of art" transmitting art broadly to the public.

*Renamed Tokyo Metropolitan Art Museum in 1943 when Tokyo Metropolis was formed.

1975 ▶ The Museum Reopens in a New Building

---

The original museum building having aged and grown cramped for space, a new building designed by MAYEKAWA Kunio was constructed. The newly reborn "Tokyo Metropolitan Art Museum" began holding curated exhibitions and collecting artworks as a full-scale art museum. It also conducted education outreach activities—the precursor of today's workshops—offered an art library open to the public, and otherwise undertook services that made it a forerunner of today's public art museum. In 1995, the Tokyo Metropolitan Art Museum relocated some 3,000 of its collected works and 50,000 art reference materials to the newly opened "Museum of Contemporary Art Tokyo."

2012 ▶ Renovation and Grand Reopening

A major renovation of the museum building was undertaken to introduce universal design and expand its restaurants and museum shop while respecting MAYEKAWA's widely popular design. On April 1, 2012, the Tokyo Metropolitan Art Museum made a fresh beginning with new thematic exhibitions and art communication Programs, based on a policy designed to enhance its vitality and appeal as an art museum.

Thematic Exhibitions

Tamana Araki Exhibition (Tentative Title)

Caos poetico, 2019

July 22 (Sat) –
October 9 (Mon - holiday), 2023

An exhibition of past works and new creations by Tamana Araki, an artist exploring wide-ranging forms of expression including painting, three-dimensional art, and installation. Featured along with past Araki works, which evoke a world in which the everyday and extraordinary coexist, will be a new large-scale installation on the theme of Ueno.

Rome, the Eternal City: Masterpieces from the Capitoline Museums' Collection

September 16 (Sat) –
December 10 (Sun), 2023

Explore the glorious history and unparalleled culture of Rome, the Eternal City. This exhibition will trace 2,000 years of history and art—from Rome's founding to its ancient glory; from the age of popes to modern times—through some 70 works mainly from the collection of the Capitoline Museums.

Art Group Exhibitions & School Education Exhibitions

Since its founding, the Museum has given art and calligraphy groups a venue for showcasing their members' works. As a place for sharing "the joy of creating," it currently hosts exhibitions of diverse genres by some 260 art groups each year. Exhibitions of graduation works by art-related high schools and universities, and exhibitions of works by children are also held.

Collection

The collection of the Tokyo Metropolitan Art Museum is composed of 12 works of sculpture and 36 works of calligraphy.

ART COMMUNICATION PROGRAMS

The Museum undertakes programs to foster communication among people through art.

The programs are designed to take viewers beyond simple viewing to a deeper "experience" of the artworks.

Tokyo Metropolitan Art Museum &
Tokyo University of the Arts

Tobira Project

Tobira Project is a "social design project" undertaken cooperatively by the Tokyo Metropolitan Art Museum, Tokyo University of the Arts, and art communicators "Tobira" recruited from the general public. By connecting people with art, with spaces, and with other people in the art museum context, the Project is working to design a community uniting people of different values and backgrounds.

A program linking all 9 cultural facilities in Ueno Park to support children in their "museum debut." The program is a "learning design project" providing a flat learning environment where adults and children learn on an equal basis. Programs for the participation of elementary, junior high, and high school students are held throughout the year.

The Tokyo Metropolitan Art Museum envisages being a museum that people can enjoy throughout their entire lives. With this concept in mind, we have launched "Creative Ageing Zuttobi" project serving the needs of super-aged society in Japan. We provide older adults with participatory programs for creative encounters with artworks.

Enjoy the Museum Building as well !

MAYEKAWA Kunio designed the current building at the age of 70. MAYEKAWA placed 60% of the building's volume below ground to meld it with Ueno Park's lush trees. As a result, the main entrance cannot be seen from the Main Gate, but the indirect approach, articulation of functions in wings, and staggered arrangement of the Citizen's Galleries imparts city-like complexity to the building's spatial composition. Another striking feature is its exterior walls, which appear like brick but are created using tiles.

Architect MAYEKAWA Kunio

MAYEKAWA Kunio was born in Niigata City in 1905. Upon graduating from Tokyo Imperial University's Architecture and Engineering Department in 1928, he traveled to France to apprentice with Le Corbusier. After returning to Japan, he designed many of Japan's most important works of modern architecture and strongly impacted Japan's architectural history.

Architecture Tour guided by art communicators ("Tobira")

"We want people to enjoy the museum building, itself!" When guiding visitors on building tours, art communicators "Tobira" let their originality shine.

*Held every 3rd Saturday of odd numbered months (in principle).
